SATURDAY, JAN. 26, 1901.

The young man who whipped thirty hazing cadets at West Point was not a resident of Ohio, but it is claimed that he was born here.

A good rule for the City Commissioners would be to find out what Carr Anderson thinks ought to be done and then do the other thing.

Gov. Dockery has sent a message to the Missouri Legislature recommending the enactment of a law which will permit the infliction of the death penalty in cases of kidnapping for ransom. Such a law in every other State would meet with the approval of the people.

There is no telling where the Carrie Nation anti-saloon frenzy is going to stop. An Indiana woman has just smashed a saloon because her husband spent money there that he had derived from the sale of chickens, and in Illinois two sisters wrecked a saloon at which drink was sold to their minor brother.

The fact that Uncle Sam has had to pay $100,000 for the blunder of the Paris Peace Commission in failing to include the islands of Sibutu and Cayagan in the treaty ceding the Philippines to America, is causing the Administration to be censured, even by its friends. The Commission included enough islands in the treaty, however, to make a great deal of other trouble and expense for Uncle Sam.

WALL STREET BOUGHT "ANARCHIST" BONDS.

About a year ago a syndicate of Wall Street investors made a large purchase of England's three per cent bonds, issued on account of the South African war.

Thereupon the Administration newspapers of America, Special Guardians of the cause of Sound Money, and Saviors of the National Honor, proceeded to boast of how under the beneficent operation of the Single Gold Standard, America had thrown off the shackles of her obligations and was becoming a creditor nation.

The first interest coupons upon the bonds matured a fortnight ago, and the owners clipped them off and sent them to England for payment, expecting to receive the full three per cent named in the bonds. Imagine their surprise when Great Britain paid only two per cent upon the coupons and retained the remaining one per cent to satisfy the English income tax law.

It would be difficult to state in what particular the Wall Street financiers were the more piqued and chagrined: Whether by the discovery that they had been buccinated out of their one per cent, or by the startling revelation that they had unwittingly invested their hard dollars in a lot of anarchist income tax bonds.

There is no alternative, however, but to accept their two per cent and look as pleasant as they can.

But the dense silence nowadays of the Administration's newspaper chorus upon the subject of American investment abroad is something wonderful to contemplate.

PETTIGREW, THE HISTORIAN.

(From the Cincinnati Enquirer.)

Senator William E. Chandler, after his defeat for re-election in New Hampshire, returned to his duties in Washington just in time to become a prominent character in a section of the interesting and protracted drama which Mr. Richard F. Pettigrew is now enacting in the capital. The country is indebted to Mr. Pettigrew for digging out and dusting off a great deal of interesting but almost forgotten history.

Mr. Chandler, who was secretary of the Republican National committee, wrote an open letter, which was published in the New York Sun of the 31st of December, 1877. It was addressed to the people of New Hampshire, and gave Mr. Chandler's reasons for opposing the so-called Southern policy of the Hayes Administration. It charged that as a result of the work done by a special commission in Louisiana before the seating of Hayes, John M. Harlan, of Kentucky, was appointed a member of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the office of Commissioner-General of the Paris exposition was offered to Joseph R. Hawley, of Connecticut.

The reading of this letter in executive session of the Senate on Monday produced a decided sensation, as already reported in The Enquirer. Mr. Hawley denounced the statement as a lie, but Mr. Chandler stood by his letter and excused the temper of the Senator from Connecticut on the ground of "physical and mental infirmities." Mr. Pettigrew, having stirred up the muck, sat back serenely in the attitude of the impartial lady who was watching a fight between her husband and a bear.

Doubtless the production of the letter was as much of a surprise to Mr. Chandler as to Mr. Hawley, and the diabolical Pettigrew may have been indifferent as to which side the shaft would go farthest into. Chandler, however, was vitriol-tipped, as usual. He excused himself from resenting the epithet "liar" on grounds which made the situation still more embarrassing for Mr. Hawley, and he added with stiletto effect that it appeared to have taken the Senator from Connecticut twenty-three years to find out that this was a lie.

What a flood of recollections the reproduction of this Chandler letter brings. How many men who afterward enjoyed honor at the hands of the Government and the people were participants in the great political robbery of 1876-7, and how many of them received political rewards. How many a man has carried ever since, or has carried to his grave, the black mark of having been a party to the great fraud of our history. It is not wonderful that a revival of so distinct a mark in the history of the affair as the Chandler letter produces a profound sensation. There are still many men alive who would be glad to have the whole incident forgotten.

And there is the New York Sun, in which the Chandler letter was originally published, which in those days would scarcely print the name of Rutherford B. Hayes in its columns without alluding to him as a fraudulent occupant of the Presidential chair. Did it not print the picture of Hayes, with "Fraud" stamped upon his forehead? Possibly the Sun, now that it is regular in its Republicanism, would be glad to have these circumstances effaced from the public memory; but they are indelible. They may be comparatively dormant for rather long periods, but they will come out often enough to keep each passing generation advised of the "great fraud."

There will be other Pettigrews, in other days, industrious enough to dig, and with facility in exposing to view the discoveries they make. These resurrections smash a halo occasionally, but what of it? It is good for us as a people. Shadowy sentimentalities too often take the places of cold facts. This Chandler letter, among other things, teaches us that so able and eminent a jurist as Mr. Justice Harlan was not snatched bodily from the blue empyrean and placed upon the woolsack to judge mankind; but that he was simply a man from Kentucky, as human, perhaps, in his attributes as citizens of Kentucky generally are, who had to get an appointment to the bench from another human being, who was charged with accepting an office to which he had not been elected, and who had to be confirmed by a body of human beings in the north end of the Capitol at Washington who were not unanimous.

Is it not worth remembering, as a matter of history, that such prominent Senators as Roscoe Conkling, George F. Edmunds and Mr. Howe voted against a favorable report in the case of Mr. Harlan? It is also something to be remembered that the report in Washington just in time to become a

Harlan was signed by four Democrats and one Republican, Mr. Christianity, of Michigan. These historical points were revived in connection with the reading of the Chandler letter in executive session of the Senate. In any event, Mr. Pettigrew has contributed something to the education of the present generation in the history of the republic.

BLOOD

We live by our blood, and on it. We thrive or starve, as our blood is rich or poor.

There is nothing else to live on or by.

When strength is full and spirits high, we are being refreshed, bone muscle and brain, in body and mind, with continual flow of rich blood.

This is health.

When weak, in low spirits, no cheer, no spring, when rest is not rest and sleep is not sleep, we are starved; our blood is poor; there is little nutriment in it.

Back of the blood, is food, to keep the blood rich. When it fails, take Scott's emulsion of cod-liver oil. It sets the whole body going again—man, woman and child.

PROGRESSIVE

Has Been Career Actual Business College.

Many Graduates Profitably Employed—College Full of Students.

Competition in the commercial world has, during the past few years, extended itself to a standard never approached by business conditions of former times. With improved facilities and methods, advancing trade and its product to the requirements of this progressive age, there comes the necessity for more concentrated and studied effort within the individual to keep pace with the new regime, and cope successfully with all the requirements of the new conditions. The busy man of affairs has little time to devote to guiding his assistants through the stages of preparation for effective and satisfactory work in the business world. There are always business positions for those prepared to take them, and the success of the individual depends very largely upon his preparation to perform the duties of the various positions of a business life.

Observing the necessity for an institution that would provide opportunity for the youth of this city to prepare themselves for useful service, Mr. H. A. Miller, February 15, 1893, founded the Actual Business College, which bears his name. The object of the college was to give practical instruction to those who contemplated entering upon a business career. In every respect has Miller's Actual Business College fulfilled the requirements of its object, and today there may be found in almost any city of this country, graduates from the institution satisfactorily and advantageously employed. Five graduates from Miller's Actual Business College are employed in Government offices at Washington; one is private secretary to Prof. Lindsay, secretary of the University of Pennsylvania, and many others are holding like important and profitable positions, and in every instance their training has been thorough and satisfactory.

The growth of the college has been steady ever since its inception. Mr. Miller began teaching in modest quarters in the Arcade block, South Howard st., and the college was opened with but one pupil in attendance. A few months later, when the purpose of the college was understood, and its work proven effective, the demand for instruction necessitated the service of assistants, and each succeeding year has found the college better patronized and better equipped. Last year, 129 pupils were graduated from the institution, and of this number 95 per cent are employed. More than 100 pupils are now in attendance upon the college. All the departments are filled, and besides liberal patronage from this city, there are pupils from Detroit, Cleveland, Mt. Vernon, Warren and other neighboring cities. It is a notable fact that the pupils from out of the city exceed in number those of Akron.

There are two departments in the college—Business Training and Short-hand. The Business Training department includes bookkeeping, letter-writing, penmanship, commercial arithmetic, commercial law, and spelling. In the Short-hand department there are taught shorthand, typewriting, penmanship, practical grammar, spelling and business letter-writing.

Three instructors give their entire attention to teaching. They are: Prof. J. F. Sterner, principal of the Business department and teacher of penmanship. He is a graduate of Delaware college, and has for the past 10 years been engaged in teaching. Miss Effie Foltz is principal of the Short-hand department, and in this work she is assisted by Mr. Harvey Slusser. All the teachers are competent and energetic; under their tutelage the pupils progress rapidly.

Mr. E. E. Workman is business manager of the college, and Mr. C. A. Miller, father of the founder of the college, is assistant. Compelled, on account of his health, to engage in other work than teaching, Mr. H. A. Miller, the founder of the college, is now in charge of the branch office of the B. F. Goodrich Rubber company, at Detroit.

As business manager, Mr. E. E. Workman is eminently successful. Under his supervision, the progress of the college has been rapid and steady. He has the confidence of the business public to such extent that one of his graduates recommended for position is always assured of a trial, which invariably results in a steady position.

The Graham system of shorthand writing is taught. It is a Pitmanic system, and has given excellent satisfaction. By competent judges, it is considered the best system now in use.

The work of Prof. J. F. Sterner,

A WOMAN'S NEEDS.

A very eminent surgeon has declared that he never lets a day pass without thanking Heaven that he was not born a woman; and this distinguished man probably knows more of woman's trials than any living person.

Yet how sweet and gracious is the gift of womanhood! To woman belong the joys of girlhood, love, and beauty—of wifehood and motherhood. "Angels are painted fair to look like thee!" but the penalty of her sex has to be paid, and the tribute it exacts is heavy with pain and weariness. Too often the payment leaves her ruined in health, bankrupt in happiness—a lifelong invalid, for want of a little timely help, perhaps a little timely knowledge.

A woman's experience, and she a doctor with an extensive practice, should carry conviction to every candid mind. It is therefore with pleasure and confidence that Dr. Louise M. Lander's letter is given to her sex.

WARREN'S SAFE CURE CO., Rochester, N. Y.
Gentlemen—Several times during the past few years I have observed the effects of Warren's Safe Cure in cases of kidney trouble. I found that the action of the medicine was highly curative in effect and that most desirable results followed its faithful use. I believe it to be a very fine remedy for kidney disorders.

in art penmanship, is attracting a great deal of attention by reason of its beauty of design and execution. Some of his productions, the college has lately had reduced to zinc etchings.

In every detail the college moves along in a manner indicative of progress and prosperity. It is appreciated by patrons and the public.
